Interphase Between Aging and Neurodegenerative Diseases Walter E.

Müller, Anne Eckert, P. Hemachandra Reddy, 2020-01-21 The purpose of this Research Topic is to discuss the latest developments in aging and neurodegenerative diseases Aging represents the major risk factor of the two most relevant neurodegenerative diseases Parkinson's disease PD and Alzheimer's disease AD It is generally accepted that symptoms of PD correlate with the severity of degeneration of dopaminergic substantia nigra neurons In most cases neuronal loss during aging is not sufficient to cause clinical symptoms but only leads to a preclinical state of PD However in a small number of our population neurodegeneration by aging gets accelerated by individual e.g. brain injuries environmental e.g. toxins and genetic e.g. mutations of the alpha synuclein gene factors to reach the critical threshold for clinical symptoms during lifetime Thus neurodegeneration in PD appears to represent the common final pathway of normal brain aging and all other risk factors including genetics and the accumulation of the neurotoxic alpha synuclein protein While aging alone is generally agreed to be sufficient for at least the preclinical state of PD the situation in AD seems to be different Aging as the major and well documented risk factor of AD has been neglected for decades Biochemical mechanisms of brain aging and the cognitive deficits of normal brain aging were seen as two not related and independent processes not related to AD AD has always been characterized for decades by the presence of histopathological alterations extracellular amyloid containing plaques and intracellular tangles of hyperphosphorylated tau protein by neurodegeneration synaptic deficits and finally neuronal loss as well as by severe cognitive deficits clinically often accompanied by neuropsychiatric symptoms like delusions as already described in the first famous patient Auguste D at the Psychiatric Hospital of Frankfurt If or if not one or both of the two histopathological hallmarks play a causative role remains unclear until now The discovery of homozygotic risk genes in most of the very rare probably less than 1% cases of early onset AD which share increased production of amyloid A as one but probably not the only one common property led to the hypothesis of A as the major causative factor for the development of AD It was neglected that plaques density in the brain of AD patients did not correlate with presence and severity of clinical symptoms while synaptic deficits did so even in first observations already published many years ago Based on the Amyloid hypothesis many drug treatments to remove A plaques were developed Even if all seemed to remove A to some extent all strategies failed to improve the symptoms of dementia Thus other concepts to explain the development of clinical symptoms of AD over time are needed These should include the brain aging process not only as a statistical but also as a causative contributing factor These concepts should not only rely on cell or animal models but should much more take into account the disease and the patients A closer look at the situation in PD will certainly be helpful

Neurotrophins Biodelivery to CNS: Innovative Approaches for Disease-Modifying Therapy Viviana Triaca, Bruno Pietro Imbimbo, Robert Nistico, 2022-06-01 Health Care Financing Review, 2004 Oxidative Stress and Antioxidant Protection Donald Armstrong, Robert D. Stratton, 2016-01-14 Oxidative Stress and Antioxidant Protection The Science of Free Radical Biology and Disease Oxidative Stress and Antioxidant Protection begins with a historical perspective of pioneers in oxidative stress with an introductory section that explains the basic principles related to oxidative stress in biochemistry and molecular biology demonstrating both pathways and biomarkers This section also covers diagnostic imaging and differential diagnostics The following section covers psychological physiologic pharmacologic and pathologic correlates This section addresses inheritance gender nutrition obesity family history behavior modification natural herbal botanical products and supplementation in the treatment of disease Clinical trials are also summarized for major medical disorders and efficacy of treatment with particular focus on inflammation immune response recycling disease progression outcomes and interventions Each of the chapters describes what biomarker s and physiological functions may be relevant to a concept of specific disease and potential alternative therapy The chapters cover medical terminology developmental change effects of aging senescence lifespan and wound healing and also illustrates cross over exposure to other fields The final chapter covers how and when to interpret appropriate data used in entry level biostatistics and epidemiology Authored and edited by leaders in the field Oxidative Stress and Antioxidant Protection will be an invaluable resource for students and researchers studying cell biology molecular biology and biochemistry as well professionals in various health science fields
