Figure 9.1 (a) shows the Universal Testing Machine required to perform the bending test on wooden beam. Figure 8.1(b) shows the experimental set-up in which a wooden beam is placed on two supports at its end. The two supports are attached to the movable grip of the UTM which is also fixed with a scale for measuring beam deflection. The load is applied through the fixed grip of the UTM at the midspan of the beam. The wooden beam has a rectangular cross-section as shown in Figure 8.1(c).

- Theory : For a beam loaded transversely, the internal forces developed in the beam are categorized as:
- Shear Force*: It is the algebraic summation of all vertical forces to either left or right of any assumed section along the length of the beam. Shear force at any section causes Shear Stresses on various fibres over the cross-section of the beam (i.e. along the depth).
