What If Everything We Knew About Investing Was Wrong:

What If Everything We Knew about Investing Was Wrong? Jeffry Haber, 2012-12-01 These have been tumultuous times for those involved in investing Since the financial crisis began in earnest in the fall of 2007 nothing has been easy in the financial markets During this period some have wondered if we have entered a new paradigm in investing they have examined whether old assumptions are still valid and contemplated whether previous metrics still have a place in today's investing arena Despite the sense that the times have changed many still cling to old methods and old ways of thinking about things This book takes the opposite view it wonders if everything we thought we knew about investing was wrong It takes the most common and widely held beliefs and presents an opposing viewpoint Too many times I have seen people agree on points where they have no basis no data nothing to support their position except that everyone knows that's the way it is At more than one conference I have challenged these notions asking for support for their belief Seldom is there anything to back up their statements Hopefully these people come away with the realization that they should do a little research or at least a little thinking before jumping on the bandwagon to agree with anything that builds momentum and consensus This is not to say that they were wrong they might very well have been correct But they would have been correct by chance not because they independently arrived at a similar conclusion based on data theory or preponderance of evidence

What if everything you knew about education was wrong? David Didau, 2015-06-10 If you feel a bit cross at the presumption of some oik daring to suggest everything you know about education might be wrong please take it with a pinch of salt What if everything you knew about education was wrong is just a title Of course you probably think a great many things that aren't wrong The aim of the book is to help you murder your darlings David Didau will question your most deeply held assumptions about teaching and learning expose them to the fiery eye of reason and see if they can still walk in a straight line after the experience It seems reasonable to suggest that only if a theory or approach can withstand the fiercest scrutiny should it be encouraged in classrooms David makes no apologies for this why wouldn't you be sceptical of what you're told and what you think you know As educated professionals we ought to strive to assemble a more accurate informed or at least considered understanding of the world around us Here David shares with you some tools to help you question your assumptions and assist you in picking through what you believe He will stew findings from the shiny white laboratories of cognitive psychology stir in a generous dash of classroom research and serve up a side order of experience and observation Whether you spit it out or lap it up matters not If you come out the other end having vigorously and violently disagreed with him you'll at least have had to think hard about what you believe The book draws on research from the field of cognitive science to expertly analyse some of the unexamined meta-beliefs in education In Part 1 Why we're wrong David dismantles what we think we know examining cognitive traps and biases assumptions gut feelings and the problem of evidence Part 2 delves deeper Through the threshold looking at progress liminality and threshold concepts the science of learning and the difference between novices and experts In Part 3 David asks us the question What could we do differently and offers some considered insights into spacing and interleaving the testing effect the generation effect reducing feedback and why difficult is desirable While Part 4 challenges us to consider What else might we be getting wrong cogitating formative assessment lesson observation grit and growth differentiation praise motivation and creativity So . . . Does Anyone Happen to Know What the Purpose of Life Is?

PFI in housing and hospitals Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts,2011-01-18 The Department of Health and the Department for Communities and Local Government the Departments are responsible for sizeable portfolios of PFI projects covering hospitals and social housing By April 2009 there were 76 operational PFI

hospitals in England and over 13 000 homes had been built or refurbished through PFI The letting of contracts and the responsibility for managing them is devolved to NHS Trusts and local authorities The Departments are responsible for overseeing their PFI programmes and reporting to the public and Parliament on value for money The Committee can find no clear and explicit justification and evaluation for the use of PFI in terms of its value for money In many cases local authorities and Trusts chose the PFI route because the Departments offered no realistic funding alternative Other concerns are central government s failure to use the market leverage that comes from overseeing multiple contracts and the lack of robust central data to support effective programme management It is clear that the implementation of PFI projects could be improved Many PFI housing procurements have taken very much longer and cost a great deal more than originally planned On hospitals most are receiving the services expected at the point contracts were signed and are generally being well managed There are however wide and unexplained variations in the cost of hospital support services such as cleaning catering and portering Departments are not using their own buying power to leverage gains for the taxpayer
