

RISK DISCLOSURE COMPLIANCE WITH IFRS 7 AND IAS 39: EVIDENCE FROM THE UK

Najeb Masoud, Aldar University College

ABSTRACT

The primary purpose of this study is to investigate the issue of compliance with the risk disclosure requirements indicated in the IFRS 7 and ISA 39. The investigation is undertaken with non-financial firms in the UK, listed in the FTSE-350 index and covers a six-year period (2007-2014). A quantitative approach involving panel data regression analysis is adopted to determine the impact of firm variables on the extent of risk disclosure compliance in annual reports. A sample of 175 non-financial UK listed firms is used. The results of the study indicate that over the six-year period, the extent of risk disclosure compliance with IFRS 7 and IAS 39 is, on average, 42.93% which is considered very low. The regression results suggest that the variables of governance, leverage, and firm size are positively and significantly associated, while profitability is negatively and insignificantly associated with the extent of risk disclosure compliance under IFRS 7 and IAS 39. Several important empirical findings emerge, which provide much of insight regarding the relevance of these standards to countries outside the western context. Future researchers might concentrate more on other requirements, such as measurement and presentation, on including financial sectors, and on giving attention to the other scoring methods mentioned in the study.

Keywords: Risk Disclosure, Compliance, IFRS 7, IAS 39, Quantitative Approach, UK.

INTRODUCTION

Risk is a complex concept to define precisely and has a multi-faceted character. Despite the width of the definition of the concept of risk disclosure, firms are mandated to disclose (or voluntary disclose) risk-related information focused mainly on financial risks (Elshandidy et al., 2018; Dobler et al., 2014). The risk disclosure literature discusses three research areas, these being: the determinants of risk disclosures (incentives); the extent (financial versus non-financial Risk) of risk disclosure; and the informativeness of risk disclosures (Elshandidy et al., 2018). Among these three research areas, risk disclosure is crucial since empirical evidence on the effects of risk disclosure compliance remains inadequate, and the potential benefit of the disclosure of information on risks has yet to be fully explored. In particular, the emergence of the International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS) and their adoption by several countries obligates firms to report in accordance with these standards. Dumay (2018) argues that disclosure is distinctive from reporting, even if the terms are mostly used synonymously. More clearly, disclosure is “the revelation of information that was previously secret or unknown”, whereas reporting is a “detailed periodic account of a company’s activities, financial condition, and prospects that is made available to shareholders and investors” (Dumay, 2018). Disclosures are thus more functional than reports because investors are always looking for well-timed and hence, valuable information, especially if it is secret or unknown. In this connection, stakeholders such as investors, regulators, and financial analysts consider risk disclosure pertinent to manage uncertainties (Epstein & Buhovac, 2006).
