Answer: The majority binds the law. Rejection of a law goes into the statute books as a law, not as a precedent.

That's right! Think of it as follows: when the Court rules on a case, it decides whether or not the law is constitutional. If the law is unconstitutional, then it is struck down. If the law is constitutional, then it remains in the statute books. The Court's decision is not a precedent. It is a statement of the law. The Court's decision is not a precedent.
