

Must the University Support a Religious Magazine?

The University of Virginia had a policy of providing funds to student publications that met certain guidelines, but it said supporting a religious magazine would violate the First Amendment's "Establishment Clause."

The student-published magazine Wide Awake applied for its share of the funding, but was turned down because it was a "magazine of philosophical and religious expression."

- Vote Thumbs-Up if you believe the university should be required to support Wide Awake in the same manner it supports other student publications.
