It is difficult to determine the true economic impact of a firm's investment in public capital improvements, but a comparison of the firm's investment in infrastructure with the firm's investment in other capital expenditures will provide a rough estimate of the firm's relative investment in infrastructure. For example, if a firm's investment in infrastructure is 10% of its total capital expenditures, it is likely that the firm is investing a significant amount in infrastructure.

Excessive work, fatigue, or overtraining increased death risk up to 10% in people at high risk for heart disease. In some cases, fatigue contributed. Excessive work, fatigue, or overtraining may produce a chronic or transient tachycardia. For example, a generally high heart rate (over 100 beats per minute) is a common cause of chest pain.
