Diabetes Basics

Diabetes is a condition caused by the body's inability to produce or use insulin, a hormone that breaks down sugar molecules in the body for energy, leading to elevated glucose levels. Consistently high glucose levels contributes to many health problems, including heart disease, blindness, renal dysfunction, kidney ailments, and loss of circulation to feet which can lead to amputation. About 25.8 million Americans have diabetes, of which 7 million remain undiagnosed.

Symptoms

- Type I: Unusual thirst, frequent urination, extreme hunger, fatigue, irritability, weight loss & blurry vision.
- Type II: Includes Type I symptoms. Recurring skin, gum and bladder infections, slow healing of cuts and bruises & numbness in hands and feet.

Three Types of Diabetes

- Type I: Your body does not produce enough insulin (5-10% of all cases).
- Type II: "Insulin Resistant" - your body doesn't use insulin properly (90-95% of all cases).
- Gestational Diabetes: Affects pregnant women and can be passed on to the child (about 4%).

How Insulin Works

After digestion, sugars are absorbed into the bloodstream. In response to this increase in blood sugar level, the pancreas secretes insulin, which binds with cells in the body and allows them to absorb and use the sugar properly. Type I diabetics need to get insulin into their bodies themselves, either through injections or insulin pumps. Type II diabetics can sometimes control their diabetes with diet and exercise in addition to oral medication and insulin.

- Use a diet exchange list so you can substitute important nutrients. Check with your doctor or the American Diabetes Association for a list.
- Read food labels religiously.
- Go with low-fat substitutes whenever possible.
- Watch for fat-free desserts high in calories and sugar.

The Care of the Uninsured in America Nancy J. Johnson, Lane P. Johnson, 2009-10-27 As Dr Cullen's chapter on information technology points out what is required is not just a new electronic system that follows the patients but a new language that creates and defines a system that can appropriately care for the patient What we design for the complexities of caring for the medically underserved can serve as model for caring for everyone in this country Many innovative bold and wonderful solutions have been developed as local regional models As communities and states we can learn from and support each other But the local models are not by and large self sustaining Ultimately so tions to the lack of medical insurance in this country will require a national perspective and federal funding That is part of the work we all must do and Dr Dalen's chapter points out some of the possibilities and pitfalls other countries have experienced When I wonder how the system we have hasn't already collapsed from its own weight I just need to look at the people working within it Healthcare is a service industry and we have been blessed with professionals who understand and live the concept of service in their daily lives who go the extra mile for the patient despite the vagaries the barriers and the sometimes mean spiritedness of the organizational infrastructure
