Momentum Daniel Seymour, 2015-12-07 An era of accountability has swept over the higher education landscape Everyone it seems legislatures think tanks newspapers magazines books and bloggers wants to hold colleges and universities accountable They are attaching strings to budgets producing reports that read like exposés developing clever systems to rank and sort us and writing books and articles that describe the end of college as we know it According to them we need to be reformed reimaged and rebooted Momentum changes the conversation from how others are holding higher education accountable to why colleges and universities need to embrace the need to demonstrate their own responsibility The responsibility paradigm that emerges fundamentally shifts the dialogue from fixing to preventing from reacting to creating from surviving to thriving To implement this new paradigm the dynamics of virtuous cycles are introduced and described These upward spirals build on their own successes and result in growing confidence a sense of vitality and resilience The future of these institutions isn't the result of outside pressure or reformers The future is something that can and should be created by those who take responsibility for it

Journal of the American Association of University Women, 1928 Community and Junior College Journal, 1984 The Aspen Prize for Community College Excellence Linda Perlstein, 2011 The nation's community colleges share a common and vital purpose preparing students young and working adults for jobs and continued academic study Today over 7 million community college students strive to attain a degree that will expand their opportunity whether they aim to graduate directly into the workforce or continue on to seek a bachelor's degree Regardless of their path what they want is no different from what every other college student and parent wants an affordable education that leads to genuine learning and ultimately a job paying good wages with benefits The community colleges profiled in this publication do an exceptional job of providing exactly that Winning the top five spots in the inaugural Aspen Prize for Community College Excellence competition these colleges are distinctive because they have achieved high levels of success for their students They partner with employers to train students for internships and then jobs after graduation They assess learning improving instruction for students who have not always excelled educationally And they graduate students delivering the quality credentials students will need to succeed in life career and continuing higher education Not resting on past successes the Prize winning community colleges understand that they must adapt if they are to thrive as their student bodies change The next generation in the U S will see a majority minority population more non whites than whites More lower income students will attend college than ever before many arriving under prepared for college level work The Aspen Prize winners offer lessons in how all students can graduate helping others understand how to expand learning graduation and job placement rates These community colleges are making good on the promise that being poor doesn't mean staying poor that college access and success together can fuel the American economy and the American dream The Aspen Institute congratulates the first annual Aspen Prize winner Valencia College and four finalists with distinction On so many other community college campuses across the United States the hard work of educating the next generation of nurses and laser technicians school teachers and small business owners as well as retraining a current generation of displaced workers is being performed admirably With this prestigious prize the Aspen Institute and its partners aim to further the national understanding of how community colleges can increase student success The winning community colleges profiled in this document have done just that They have shown us that what colleges do matters deeply to student achievement This paper was supported by the Bank of America Charitable Foundation and JPMorgan Chase Foundation
