Life-span Developmental Psychology Paul B. Baltes, Hayne W. Reese, John R. Nesselroade, 2014-01-02 What are the changes we see over the life span How can we explain them And how do we account for individual differences This volume continues to examine these questions and to report advances in empirical research within life span development increasing its interdisciplinary nature The relationships between individual development social context and historical change are salient issues discussed in this volume as are nonnormative and atypical events contributing to life span change

Lifespan Development Leo B. Hendry, Marion Kloep, 2002 Takes a lifespan approach with much greater emphasis on adulthood and old age than many other developmental books This reflects the continual increase in this portion of the population in present day society Uses one central model the challenge risk model throughout to tie all the different stages of the lifespan together making this topic much less confusing for students Introduces other theoretical models where appropriate to provide a balanced view of approaches to the subject Includes world wide research findings and examples Considers developmental psychology as an interdisciplinary topic looking at motor cognitive and social skills together rather than as unrelated topics Thomson
