Transforming the Organization Howard W. Oden, 1999-11-30 The rapidly increasing rate of world change demands not just incremental change that organizations have used in the past but fast radical alterations of their strategy culture structure and processes Nothing less than transformation will do says Dr Oden a complex continuing effort that may be closer to revolution than evolution Oden lays it out in his customarily clear programmatic way He covers actions that must precede the initiation of a transformation guidance on how to perform the technical social and behavioral tasks and the actions required to wrap up and integrate everything into a complete workably transformed organization His book provides a clear goal for the transformation an excellent description of transformational leadership and a simple powerful model of the process The result is essential reading for upper management in private and public sector organizations and for their colleagues in the academic community Part I covers the preparatory actions that organizations should take before initiating a transformation without which the effort is doomed to failure says Dr Oden In Part II he covers the technical or engineering aspects of the transformation First he develops a process map of the organization as the basis for process improvement then he diagnoses the existing and future organization to determine how processes should be improved In Part III he looks at the various organizational change methods that are available conducts a broad design of the total organization and then designs the human resource support processes for the transformed organization Finally in Part IV Dr Oden shows how to incorporate the redesigned processes into the existing system the most difficult part of the transformation and ends by showing how better integration can be achieved to provide better overall transformational results

Information Technology and Organizational Transformation JoAnne Yates, John Van Maanen, 2000-12-14 This book provides one of the first clear headed assessments of information technology and organizational transformation Its virtue is not so much in its recognition of the importance of the subject speculations on this topic have been rampant for more than a decade Rather it is unusual and unusually useful because it avoids speculation in favor of conceptually coherent accounts grounded in empirical study of actual organizations The chapters contained in this volume move beyond the superficial glorification of information technology as an extraordinary instrument of social change and straight to the heart of the mechanisms of change as they play out in everyday organizational life In the process they reaffirm that the real story of information technology in organizations is more about people than about technology Taken together they provide an important contribution to the intellectual foundations of one of the most interesting developments in decades Information Technology and Organizational Transformation consists of three parts The first consists of studies that take an historical perspective on informational technology and organizational transformation The second set of chapters deals with the rhetoric of information technology and organizational transformation The third section concerns the practices that emerge when a new information technology is made available to organizational members Do practices change How so These are the questions that in our view are central to any serious consideration of organizational transformation This volume contains several important articles first published in the Spring 1996 special issue of ISR co edited by Yates and Van Maanen and subsequently in several cases updated for this volume In addition four new articles were added and the book was divided into the three sections highlighted in the subtitle history rhetoric and practice New articles include three focused on the rhetoric surrounding IT and organizational change Suzanne Iacono and Robert Kling on The Rise of the Internet and Distant Forms of Work by John R Weeks on IT in a Culture of Complaint and Charles Bazerman on Political Participation in the Age of the Internet In addition there is a paper in the Practice section by Brian Pentland entitled Big Brother Goes Portable Enduser Computing in the Internal Revenue Service Includes a preface by John King now Dean of the School of Information University of Michigan

Transforming Organizations Thomas A. LeRoy, 2017-10-05 This book offers leaders an approach to systemically affect change and create cultures of excellence where staff work together to change the way they view their work Based on well known quality concepts readers will discover the essential concepts and actions that have the power to transform every system Current Theory and Research in Transforming Organizations Chester A. Schriesheim, Linda L. Neider, 2016-09-01 Perhaps the best word to describe the past fifteen or so years of the twenty first century is change Spurred on by the massive layoffs and reorganizations that took place during the recessionary period starting in late 2007 to changes in labor demographics technology competitiveness and the very nature of work business transformations have become the norm Even the most stodgy and inflexible organizations universities are beginning to understand the need for radical change if they hope to be sustainable in the future From our perspective as researchers in management we became increasingly interested in new trends and ideas in the field of transforming business and non profit enterprises What are the variables associated with success What determinants may mediate whether or not change efforts actually lead to more sustainable systems And how do such change efforts differ from strategic planning which has obviously been around and used for many years To begin answering such questions this volume attempts to bring together a number of scholars who present conceptualizations and preliminary research insights concerning organizational change and in two of the chapters explore the relationship between change efforts and strategy formulation implementation
