

Features and Benefits

Feedforward Adaptive Control

The Tracer chiller controller allows the system designer to explore energy saving strategies and allows the centrifugal chiller to be used in ways that were never thought possible.

Feedforward Adaptive Control

Feedforward is an open-loop, predictive control strategy designed to anticipate and compensate for load changes. It uses evaporator entering-water temperature as an indication of load change. This allows the controller to respond faster and maintain stable leaving-water temperatures.

Soft Loading

The chiller controller uses soft loading except during manual operation. Large adjustments due to load or setpoint changes are made gradually, preventing the compressor from cycling unnecessarily. It does this by internally filtering the setpoints to avoid reaching the differential-to-stop or the current limit. Soft loading applies to the leaving chilled-water temperature and current-limit setpoints.

Multi-Objective Limit Arbitration

There are many objectives that the controller must meet, but it cannot satisfy more than one objective at a time. Typically, the controller's primary objective is to maintain the evaporator leaving-water temperature.

Whenever the controller senses that it can no longer meet its primary objective without triggering a protective shutdown, it focuses on the most critical secondary objective. When the secondary objective is no longer critical, the controller reverts to its primary objective.

Fast Restart

While the inlet guide vanes are closing, the controller will allow the centrifugal chiller to restart and going to a posttube operational mode. If the chiller shuts down on a nonlatching diagnostic, the diagnostic has 30–60 seconds to clear itself and initiate a fast restart. This includes momentary power losses.

Building Automation and Chiller Plant Control

For a preprogrammable and flexible building automation and chiller plant control, Trane has developed the Tracer Summit™. It can control the operation of the complete installation: chillers, pumps, cooling towers, isolating valves, air handlers and terminal units. Trane can undertake full responsibility for an optimized automation and energy management for the entire chiller plant.

The main functions are:

- Chiller sequencing: equalizes the number of running hours of the chillers. Different control strategies are available depending on the configuration of the installation.
- Control of the auxiliaries: includes input/output modules to control the operation of the various auxiliary equipments (water pumps, valves, cooling towers, etc.)

- Time of day scheduling: allows the end user to define the occupancy period, i.e. time of the day, holiday periods and exception schedules.
- Optimization of the start/stop time of the installation: based on the programmed schedule of occupancy and on the historical record of the behavior of the temperatures, calculates the optimal time of start and stop of the installation to get the best compromise between energy savings and comfort of the occupants.
- Soft loading: the soft loading function minimizes the number of chillers that are operated to satisfy the building morning pull down, thus preventing an overshoot of the actual capacity required. Unnecessary starts are avoided and the peak current demand is lowered.
