Saltzman Chafetz, 2006-11-22 During the past three decades feminist scholars have successfully demonstrated the ubiquity and omnirelevance of gender as a sociocultural construction in virtually all human collectivities past and present. Intrapsychic, interactional and collective social processes are gendered as are micro, meso and macro social structures. Gender shapes and is shaped in all arenas of social life from the most mundane practices of everyday life to those of the most powerful corporate actors. Contemporary understandings of gender emanate from a large community of primarily feminist scholars that spans the gamut of learned disciplines and also includes non academic activist thinkers. However while incorporating some cross disciplinary material this volume focuses specifically on sociological theories and research concerning gender which are discussed across the full array of social processes, structures and institutions. As editor I have explicitly tried to shape the contributions to this volume along several lines that reflect my long standing views about sociology in general and gender sociology in particular. First I asked authors to include cross national and historical material as much as possible. This request reflects my belief that understanding and evaluating the here and now and working realistically for a better future can only be accomplished from a comparative perspective. Too often American sociology has been both temperate and ethnocentric. Second I have asked authors to be sensitive to within gender differences along class, racial, ethnic, sexual preference and age cohort lines.

Most violence against women occurs in the context of intimate relationships. Henton Cate Koval Lloyd Collins 1996. The present study examines whether men who are violent against women have different adult attachment styles than men who are not violent against women. The participants were 176 men with a mean age of 33 who were participants in a longitudinal study of sexual aggression. Malamuth Linz Heavey Barnes 55% of the violent men reported using at least 4 of the 14 sexually and physically aggressive behaviors studied. Adult attachment style was unrelated to physical violence, sexual violence and the combination both physical and sexual violence against women. Four possible explanations were discussed: the high base rate of violence in the sample, problems in the measurement of adult attachment style, the failure of the design of the study to capture the complexity of the relationship between adult attachment style and violence against women, and the possibility that the original hypothesis was wrong. Several directions for additional research were described. Gender, Culture, and Ethnicity Letitia Anne Peplau, 1999. Comprises 25 essays which explore the joint effects of gender, culture and ethnicity in people's lives Discusses ways in which the lives of men and women differ from one culture to another and examines issues of race and class stereotypes and roles Covers a range of cultural and ethnic populations and addresses issues affecting both women and men Includes papers on gender and health on a kibbutz in Israel feminist therapy among Puerto Rican women rarity of intergroup violence in a community in Papua New Guinea and the compatibility of hunting and mothering in the Philippines
