Woman This Is War! Gender, Slavery & the Evangelical Caste System Jocelyn Andersen, 2010-07 Complementarianism also called complementarity teaches that all men are born into a leadership caste and all women are born into a follower caste This caste system follows them from the moment they exit the womb throughout all eternity The doctrine suppresses the autonomy of adult Christian women and has been embraced with few exceptions by virtually every Christian denomination despite unmistakable parallels between complementarian dogma and the adverse effects of the paradigm on men women and children and that of institutionalized slavery in previous centuries caveat lots of Black History up through the Civil Rights Movement Woman this is War quotes well known evangelical pastors who compare Christian marriage to a war of dominance between wives and husbands a war they claim that husbands must win Gender biased English translation theology along with male centered Bible commentary and translation practices are used in forbidding women to preach pastor or serve as elders and deacons in most churches This hinders the work of the gospel In most churches where women are not forbidden to preach they are told to submit to their husbands at home Gender biased English translation theology has interfered with understanding the scriptures pitted men and women against each other and eroded the happiness of women and men All of this is wrong The book contains rare insights into Christian initiatives in the movements for women's rights that have either deliberately or inadvertently been kept out of Christian literature These observations bring a new perspective along with freedom and hope The doctrine of female submission to male headship in the church and home is refuted using scripture to support equality between women and men Woman this is WAR is a treasure trove of information on gender equality from biblical historical and Christian perspectives
