It covers all you need to know about IP Address and your computer. An IP address is a numerical label assigned to every device connected to a computer network that uses the Internet Protocol for communication. It serves two main functions: it identifies the host or device on a network, and it provides the location of the host in the network. There are two versions of IP addresses currently in use: IPv4 and IPv6. IP addresses are assigned to devices by ISPs when a device connects to the internet. There are several ways to find out your IP address, including using a command prompt or terminal on your computer or visiting a website that displays your IP address. The book covers all aspects of IP addresses, including their history, structure, and function. It explains the difference between IPv4 and IPv6 addresses and discusses the various types of IP addresses, including public and private, static and dynamic. The book also covers topics such as network prefixes, subnets, NAT, DNS, DHCP, and the role of IP addresses in network security. Additionally, the book covers the use of IP address geolocation and the various methods for determining the location of a device based on its IP address. The book also discusses the future of IP addresses, including the transition to IPv6 and the development of new technologies to address the demand for more flexible and efficient IP addressing. IP Addresses Daniel Lewis Lusher, 2013 Internet Protocol (IP) addresses are frequently used as a method of locating web users by researchers in several different fields. However, there are competing reports concerning the accuracy of those locations, and little research has been done in manually comparing the IP geolocation databases and web page geographic information. Some research has been done using a variety of analytical techniques in order to estimate IP address accuracy, but there has not been a large-scale manual investigation. Members of the GIScience community have developed techniques for visualizing point data, but there has not been much research in how to apply these practices to the phenomena of IP address point data. This thesis research worked in the intersection of GIScience, Internet research, and Geostatistics in order to examine IP accuracy at the city level and to determine the better methods for visualizing IP address point values. The first part of this thesis examined IP geolocation address accuracy in more depth and processed several datasets for locational accuracy. Using a previously built custom searching tool that uses popular search engine APIs to extract a list of web pages for a keyword, six keywords were gathered. These keywords were Mitt Romney, Rick Santorum, Michael McGinn, Jerry Sanders, Flu, HPV Vaccine. When manually visiting each web page gathered by the searching tool, three types of data were gathered. First, I categorized each web page into one of twelve categories ranging from Blog and News to Education and Governmental. Second, the slant of the web page was examined, answering whether it was supporting the subject at hand or attacking the subject. Third and most important, this research looked to find the mailing or street address of the web page's content creator and compare this address to the given IP address. The second part of this thesis has attempted to answer the question of how to visualize IP address geolocation data using the processed IP address data. Framing IP addresses as points and using a kernel density function in order to create a surface, how do different input parameters affect the final surface and therefore pattern recognition? This study examined the kernel radius value, the method of calculating a population value, the method used to normalize the data, and the interactions of the different categories discussed above. By comparing the resulting maps side by side, the spatial patterns identified using IP addresses are better understood while recognizing better techniques to remove unwanted IP address spatial inaccuracies. The resulting spatial patterns with relevant properties of the keywords were also compared.

IP Address Auto-configuration for Wireless Adohoc Networks Murimo Bethel Mutanga, 2019

IP Addressing and Subnetting INC IPV6 Syngress, 2000-01-28

Internetworking Protocol IP addresses are the unique numeric identifiers required of every device connected to the Internet. They allow for the precise routing of data across very complex worldwide internetworks. The rules for their format and use are governed by the Internet Engineering Task Force (IETF) of the The Internet Society (ISOC). In response to the exponential increase in demand for new IP addresses, the IETF has finalized its revision on IP addressing as IP Version 6, also known as IPng or Next Generation. Key hardware vendors such as Cisco and major Internet Service Providers such as America Online have already announced plans to migrate to IP Version 6. IP address allocation within an organization requires a lot of long-term planning. This timely publication addresses the administrator and engineer's need to know how IP 6 impacts their enterprise networks. Easy to read, light technical approach to cellular technology. Ideal for companies planning a phased migration from IP 4 to IP 6. Timely publication. The IETF standard was finalized in early 1999 and will begin to be implemented in late 1999/2000. The current IP Version 4 address set will be exhausted by 2003. The book focuses on planning and configuring networks and devices for IP 6. Specifically, it will cover how to increase the IP address size from 32 bits to 128 bits, support more levels of addressing hierarchy, support an increased number of addressable nodes, support simpler auto-configuration of addresses, improve the scalability of multicast routing by adding a scope field to multicast addresses, use a new anycast address to send a packet to any one of a group of nodes.
