another trigger in the individual's life that brings on the onset of a painful arthritic joint. There are medical triggers for gout. These include the following: Taking diuretic medications that concentrate the uric acid in the blood. Diuretics are used to treat high blood pressure, heart failure, or swelling of the legs. Infections occurring in the body, not necessarily in the joints of the body. The onset of a severe illness anywhere in the body. Injury to a specific joint that responds by precipitating uric acid crystals into the joint space. Being on chemotherapy drugs. Starting a medication that is supposed to reduce the uric acid in the blood. Taking cyclosporine for various reasons. Some of the lifestyle factors that trigger gout include the following: Consumption of sugary beverages such as sodas. Dehydration through not taking in fluids or losing fluids through diarrhea or diuretics. Taking on a crash diet or fasting. Eating high purine foods such as shellfish and red meats. Drinking excessive amounts of alcohol, particularly beer. It is important to remember that these triggers lead to hyperuricemia, which may or may not result in gouty arthritis. Not all cases of hyperuricemia will be symptomatic and will lead to joint pain. This is why the absolute value of the uric acid is not a good diagnostic test for gouty arthritis, as the elevation in uric acid may not be the cause of a given case of arthritis, and gouty arthritis may be present with normal uric acid levels.

Risk Factors for Gout As mentioned, about 3 million or more people in the US suffer from gout. Those at the highest risk of developing gout include the following: Men at any age, although the disease increases with age. Women who have already gone through menopause. People of any age with kidney disease. People who are obese. People who have high blood pressure.

successful treatment of Gout it is necessary to have a clear idea of what constitutes its various parts notably must we differentiate between its pre deposit symptoms and its post deposit symptoms for much of the want of success in its cure is due to a mixing up of the two sets of symptoms The symptoms that precede and lead up to the uric acid retentions in the blood are a series by themselves those due to the uric acid in the blood and which lead up to the gouty deposit as an attack or as chronic deposits are a second series The former really spell arthritic cacopysia While the latter are synonymous with uric acid poisoning in the one we deal with the producing power in the other with the product This differentiation being made we proceed on two lines with the treatment the one to get rid of the gouty attack and the deposits and the other the more important to deal with that which leads to the production of the uric material The following pages are intended to set forth the writer s method of procedure About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
