

A black and white photograph of a large, ornate, classical-style building facade. The structure features a prominent pediment supported by several columns. The facade is highly detailed with carvings and architectural elements. The building appears to be a government or institutional structure, possibly a parliament or a university building. The photograph is taken from a low angle, looking up at the building, which emphasizes its grandeur and scale. The image is somewhat grainy and has a historical feel.

During that time he produced over eight hundred paintings and a huge collection of drawings. Virtually self-taught, van Gogh developed his own individual style which continues to inspire many today. Few artists of his time regarded him as a great painter, but during the twentieth century decades after his death he ranked among the most popular of artists. His works reveal an intense and expressive energy that is unmistakable. Walther, Vincent van Gogh, 1993. This man will go insane or leave us all far behind prophesied the great impressionist Camille Pissarro. The man was Vincent Van Gogh 1853-1890, a vicar's son born at Groot Zundert near Breda in Holland. Van Gogh was a solitary, despairing and self-destructive man and followed a variety of professions before becoming an artist. He craved recognition throughout his life, which was denied until after his self-inflicted death. Today he is universally recognised as one of the great forerunners of 20th-century painting and one of the tragic masters of art. This study by the two leading experts, Reiner Metzger and Ingo F. Walther, who previously published the first ever Complete Paintings of Van Gogh, follows the artist from the early gloom-laden paintings in which he captured the misery of peasants and workers in his home province through the bright and colourful paintings from his period in Paris to the work of his final years under the southern sun in Arles, where at last he found the light that produced the unmistakable Van Gogh style. Bombarded by influences from every quarter, Van Gogh tried a number of approaches and techniques before leaving Arles in 1888. In search of a new style and in a feverish burst of creative energy that marked the last two and a half years of his life, he produced the 465 paintings on which his immortality rests.
