Abstract This is a theory-driven investigation into whether the various theories of how to prevent crime, through a common research agenda, are actually being adopted. For this reason, an array of theories were tested and the results suggest there is potential for additional crime-reduction strategies to be adopted.

The data reported in this study are preliminary and need to be confirmed by future research. The results regarding the positive relationship between the use of the Internet and the use of mobile devices are promising. However, the results regarding the negative relationship between the use of the Internet and the use of mobile devices are not significant. This may be due to the fact that the use of the Internet and the use of mobile devices are not mutually exclusive. The use of the Internet and the use of mobile devices can be used together. For example, a user can use the Internet to search for information and then use a mobile device to access the information. This suggests that the use of the Internet and the use of mobile devices are not mutually exclusive. The use of the Internet and the use of mobile devices can be used together.
