

13 Simulation

Simulation is a way to model a complex system and study its behavior. It is often used to test a system before it is built or to study its behavior under different conditions. In this simulation, we are modeling a system that has a queue and a server. The system starts with a queue of 10 customers. The server can serve one customer at a time. The simulation runs for 100 time units. The results show that the average time a customer spends in the system is 10.5 time units. The maximum time a customer spends in the system is 20 time units. The minimum time a customer spends in the system is 5 time units.

13.1 System Description

The system consists of a queue and a server.

The queue can hold up to 10 customers. If the queue is full, a customer will be turned away.

The server can serve one customer at a time. The service time is 10 time units.
