

UNDERSTANDING VINEYARD SOILS

Justin Scheiner¹ and Michael Cook²

Soil management is an important aspect of grape production that may begin even before planting a vineyard. Soil provides the water and essential nutrients required for healthy grapevine growth and production, and like the grapevines themselves, vineyard soils require care.

Figure 1. Ideally, soil is about half minerals and organic materials, and the other half is space filled with an equal amount of air and water.

WHAT IS SOIL?

Soil is composed of small particles of minerals and organic matter, and the space between them is filled with air and water (Fig. 1). Based on their mineral composition and particle size, soils can vary widely in both their physical and chemical properties. Together, these properties are used to classify soils.

Soils are most broadly grouped into 12 soil orders, nine of which can be found in the state of Texas. The most specific classification of soils is soil series, and more than 1,300 different series have been identified across Texas. Although vineyards can be successfully grown in a wide range of soils, it is important for a grape grower to learn as much as possible about their soil prior to planting to determine if it is suitable for a vineyard, if modifications can and should be made, and/or if specific rootstocks should be used. Within a single site, soil can vary significantly, so it is important to thoroughly test the soil to determine its characteristics. The most important soil tests are chemical composition, soil depth, and internal drainage.

SOIL TEXTURE

Soil texture refers to the size of the particles that make up the soil, and this has an important impact on soil properties. There are three textural classes: sand, silt, and clay. Sand has the largest particle size (2 to 0.05 mm diameter), followed by silt (0.05 to 0.002 mm diameter), and then clay (<0.002 mm diameter) (Fig. 2).
