Theory Of Hacking:

Instituting Science Timothy Lenoir, 1997 Early practitioners of the social studies of science turned their attention away from questions of institutionalization which had tended to emphasize macrolevel explanations and attended instead to microstudies of laboratory practice Though sympathetic to this approach as the microstudies included in this book attest the author is interested in re investigating certain aspects of institution formation notably the formation of scientific medical and engineering disciplines He emphasizes the manner in which science as cultural practice is imbricated with other forms of social political and even aesthetic practices This book offers case studies that reexamine certain critical junctures in the traditional historical picture of the evolution of the role of the scientist in modern Western society It focuses especially on the establishment of new disciplines within German research universities in the nineteenth century the problematic relationship that emerged between science industry and the state at the turn of the twentieth century and post World War II developments in science and technology After an Introduction and two chapters dealing with science and technology as cultural production and the struggles of disciplines to achieve legitimation and authority the author considers the following topics the organic physics of 1847 the innovative research program of Carl Ludwig as a model for institutionalizing science based medicine optics painting and ideology in Germany 1845 95 Paul Ehrlich s magic bullet the Haber Bosch synthesis of ammonia and the introduction of nuclear magnetic resonance instrumentation into the practice of organic chemistry The Construction of Human Kinds Ron Mallon, 2016-08-11 Ron Mallon explores how thinking and talking about kinds of person can bring those kinds into being Social constructionist explanations of human kinds like race gender and homosexuality are commonplace in the social sciences and humanities but what do they mean and what are their implications This book synthesizes recent work in evolutionary cognitive and social psychology as well as social theory and the philosophy of science in order to offer a naturalistic account of the social construction of human kinds Mallon begins by qualifying social constructionist accounts of representations of human kinds by appealing to evidence suggesting canalized dispositions towards certain ways of representing human groups using race as a case study He then turns to interpret constructionist accounts of categories as attempts to explain causally powerful human kinds by appealing to our practices of representing them and he articulates a view in which widespread representations produce entrenched social roles that could vindicate such attempts Mallon goes on to explore constructionist concerns with the social consequences of our representations focusing especially on the way human kind representations can alter our behaviour and undermine our self understandings and our agency Mallon understands socially constructed kinds as the real sometimes stable products of our cognitive and representational practices and he suggests that reference to such kinds can figure in our everyday and scientific practices of representing the social world The result is a realistic naturalistic account of how human representations might contribute to making up the parts of the social world that they represent Meanest Foundations and Nobler Superstructures Ofer

Gal,2013-11-11 This book is a historical epistemological study of one of the most consequential breakthroughs in the history of celestial mechanics Robert Hooke's 1635-1703 proposal to compound the celestial motions of the planets of a direct motion by the tangent and an attractive motion towards a central body Newton The Correspondence li 297 Henceforth Correspondence This is the challenge Hooke presented to Isaac Newton 1642-1727 in a short but intense correspondence in the winter of 1679-80 which set Newton on course for his 1687 Principia transforming the very concept of the planetary heavens in the process Herivel 301 De Motu Version III 1 It is difficult to overstate the novelty of Hooke's Programme The celestial motions it suggested those proverbial symbols of stability and immutability were in fact a process of continuous change a deflection of the planets from original rectilinear paths by a central attractive power Correspondence li 313 There was nothing necessary or essential in the shape of planetary orbits Already known to be not circular nor concentrically Hooke claimed that these apparently closed curves should be understood and calculated as mere effects of rectilinear motions and rectilinear attraction And as Newton was quick to realize this also implied that the planets neither move exactly in ellipse nor revolve twice in the same orbit so that there are as many orbits to a planet as it has revolutions Herivel 301 De Motu Version III
