

FCU – The patient is asked to flex their wrist against resistance; the tension in the tendon of FCU can be seen and palpated.

FDP (little finger) – Stabilise the patient's little finger PIPJ in extension and feel for active flexion of the DIPJ against resistance.

ADM – Ask the patient to hold their hands with palms facing their face and spread open their fingers. Push the little finger towards the ring finger. Weakness results in the inability of the little finger to maintain its position.

First dorsal interosseous – Hold the patient's hand with the index finger uppermost. Ask them to lift the finger (abduct), then resist your pressure as you span the finger with your other hand as you palpate the muscle belly.

Froment's test – The patient is asked to grasp a piece of paper in the first web space, between their extended thumb and extended fingers. Normally, the first dorsal interosseous and adductor pollicis would be able to resist the examiner pulling the paper out and the thumb would remain extended. However, if the ulna nerve is deficient, the patient will recruit the AIN innervated FPL to grasp the paper and the thumb IP joint will flex.
