The Voice of the Dolphins Hardy Jones, 2011 In 1978 filmmaker Hardy Jones was swept into the universe of dolphins In his work as a filmmaker he came to know many of these magnificent animals as individuals I know when I m with them that I m relating to creatures as intelligent social and imbued with emotion as I am Hardy s life became even more closely entwined with dolphins when he learned that he and the dolphins share a genetic trait that imperils both his life and the survival of dolphins worldwide Starting with the film that came from his first life changing encounter with spotted dolphins in the Bahamas he s made over 70 documentaries for PBS National Geographic Discovery Channel and foreign broadcasters Filming became my entr e into the world of dolphins but not my ultimate purpose there My true aim was to get inside the minds of these enormously intelligent and friendly animals In coming years Hardy would apply what he had learned to killer whales in the Arctic fjords of Norway and sperm whales off the Galapagos and the Caribbean Island of Dominica I became a pioneer in a parallel universe inhabited by highly intelligent friendly curious aliens I came to love them and felt an intense need to protect them For more than three decades Hardy has fought to end the slaughter of dolphins by Japanese fishermen and was instrumental in converting a dolphin hunter to a dolphin watch tour leader In the late 1980s Hardy became aware of a threat to dolphins even more insidious than the blades of dolphin hunters rising levels of chemical toxins in the oceans that were impacting marine life and human beings Over succeeding decades these contaminants have reached crisis level In 2003 Hardy was diagnosed with an incurable form of blood cancer that is linked to chemical toxins I ve struggled with the side effects of medications but my first lab tests after beginning treatment brought stunning results My burden of monoclonal cells had been reduced by ninety eight percent The diagnosis spurred Hardy to seek the sources of the pollutants in his own body and to document their impact on marine life and human beings Hardy continues treatment and maintains an active life traveling the world to campaign for dolphins the oceans and the welfare of humanity The Voice of the Dolphins John McClaughry, Council for a Livable World, 196?
