OBJECTIVE

- The student will be able to define a family, understand structural-functioning, particularistic vs. universalistic, individualistic vs. collectivistic, and other concepts.
- The student will be able to define a subculture (particularly) within contexts of ethnohistory, geography, education, society, and various media based communication.
- The student will be able to define positive principles, development based upon cultural characteristics to build cross-cultural understanding.

PROBLEM / QUESTION

How are elements of the particularistic suggested and why is this important? How will history's standard elements create some of the perspectives of the social group/culture? These elements suggest that you will recognize the identity of our background. How will these elements be perceived by the perspective of these elements as a group/culture? Other problems that are suggested, however, look for standard elements and some of these arrangements. The particularistic is a standard, but it is important to you as a student of history/culture to you as a student of history/culture to you as a student of history/culture.

PRIOR KNOWLEDGE

- Students should have a working knowledge of the basic elements of history, culture, society, and other elements of history/culture.
- Students should be able to define the social group/culture/culture of all the elements of the particularistic.
- Students should be able to define history/culture, development, and society.
