 furnished artificially or the fish will languish I am not prepared to say what kind of earth is the I have sometimes found the stomach of a wild trout nearly half full of gravel best but I think that the earth from just under a tolerably rich sod is as good as any if not better It is a very good way to put the whole sod in the trough or box The fish will get off of it what they want and the presence of the vegetable growth in the water is favorable to their health Muck I have sometimes thought the best and it is said to be the most powerful of earth absorbents but I have also had misgivings that the muck sometimes had something injurious in it It may be only a fancy however At all events the earth just under a fresh green sod answers the purpose and is good and wholesome The application of the earth should be renewed as often as the fish seem to require it and indeed it is best not to wait till they show signs of wanting it but to give it to them often and keep sods in all the time and whenever you perceive anything in the troughs that is likely to foul the water throw a handful of earth over it If you have a pride in keeping a clean gravelly bed to your troughs you can cover over the earth after a day or so with clean gravel and it will look as well as before but you must give them earth again soon As the spring advances the young fry will continue to grow and one day s routine in taking care of them will be very much like another through the summer This does not imply however that the work is monotonous or dull On the contrary it is exceedingly interesting and the more closely you observe them the more interesting the care of them becomes
