

The dual focus of this volume is on the plastic nanoparticles (PNPs) that result from the embrittlement and abrasion of the plastic debris illustrated below, as well as the nanoparticles, including nanoplastics, which are the ubiquitous, if invisible, product of the Age of Nanotechnology. Plastic nanoparticles (PNPs) are derived from plastic wastes and become a hazardous material due to declining size and increasing surface to mass ratio, which results in the rapid increase of the sorption (absorption and/or adsorption) of environmental chemicals. Ecotoxic PNPs are then ingested by heterotrophic grazing microbes and are biomagnified in marine and other food webs. Plastic nanoparticles are an additional invisible vector for the movement of environmental chemicals throughout the biosphere, and raise public safety issues of compelling contemporary interest to all concerned citizens.

A riverine environment contaminated with plastic debris after a minor flooding event

The plastics in this photo will gradually abrade and disintegrate into mesoplastics (≤ 10 mm), then into microplastics (< 1 mm) that become increasingly invisible and difficult to quantify as they continue to devolve into plastic nanoparticles (≈ 100 nm).

"Nanoparticles in the environment could constitute a completely new class of non-biodegradable pollutants... [They are] highly reactive nanoparticles which, because of their small size, can have a total surface area measuring up to 1,000 square meters per gram." (Hett 2004)

Global Climatic Catastrophes Michael I. Budyko, Georgi S. Golitsyn, Yuri A. Izrael, 2013-11-11 The necessity of eliminating the possibility of a large scale nuclear conflict from the future of mankind is the most important problem of our times There is no doubt that the probable aftereffects of such a conflict would by many times exceed the damage caused by the First and Second World Wars the greatest in history The question of the scale of the damage that would be inflicted upon living nature by nuclear weapons has however not yet been fully clarified It is clear that this damage would not be local i e restricted to destruction in only the places of nuclear explosion As a result of nuclear detonations the atmosphere and hydrosphere would receive many harmful substances including the radioactive waste products of nuclear reactions These substances can be transferred by air flows and water currents over long distances thus considerably increasing the area of harmful influence of nuclear bursts There is no doubt that the indirect effects of nuclear warfare would inflict enormous damage on mankind since the present human society can only exist by a complicated system involving the production of foodstuffs manufactured goods medical supplies etc The destruction of even separate but important links of this system would bring about starvation epidemics and other calamities which would spread to areas not directly involved in the nuclear conflict
