

The old bell, presage of a train, had just sounded through Oxford station and the undergraduates who were waiting there, gay figures in tunics or gannet, moved to the margin of the platform and gazed east up the line. Young and careless, in the glow of the afternoon sun, they struck a sharp note of incongruity with the worn benches they stood on, with the fading signals and grey eternal walls of that antique station, which, familiar to them and insignificant, did yet whisper to the tourist the last enchantments of the Middle Ages.

At the door of the first-class waiting-room, aloof and venerable, stood the Warden of Judas. An ebon pillar of tradition seemed he, in his garb of old-fashioned cleric. Aloft, between the wide brim of his tall hat and the white extent of his shirt-front, appeared those eyes which hawks, that nose which eagles, had often envied. He supported his years on an ebon stick. He alone was worthy of the background.

Came a whistle from the distance. The breast of an engine was dimmed, and a long train curving after it, under a flight of smoke.
