The Visual System Of Fish:

The Visual System of Fish Ron Douglas, Mustafa Djamgoz, 2012-12-06 A question often asked of those of us who work in the seemingly esoteric field of fish vision is why To some of us the answer seems obvious how many other visual scientists get to dive in a tropical lagoon in the name of science and then are able to eat their subjects for dinner However there are better or at least scientifically more acceptable reasons for working on the visual system of fish First in terms of numbers fish are by far the most important of all vertebrate classes probably accounting for over half c 22 000 species of all recognized vertebrate species Nelson 1984 Furthermore many of these are of commercial importance Secondly if one of the research aims is to understand the human visual system animals such as fish can tell us a great deal since in many ways their visual systems and specifically their eyes are similar to our own This is fortunate since there are several techniques such as intracellular retinal recording which are vital to our understanding of the visual process that cannot be performed routinely on primates The cold blooded fish on the other hand is an ideal subject for such studies and much of what we know about for example the fundamentals of information processing in the retina is based on work carried out on fish e g Svaetichin 1953 the basic principles underlying the efficiency and adaptability of cellular metabolism is the structural compartmentalization of the cell Only through compartmentalization can reaction components be kept apart prior to their reaction isolated from other reaction spaces during the course of their reaction and the reaction products incorporated into designated structures or transported to remote parts of the cell Thus the partitioning of the cellular substance into countless membranous spaces corresponds to the spatial segregation of reaction components and the dynamics of intracellular membrane systems is an expression of ever changing equilibrium conditions and the continuous formation of new reaction spaces It has been shown with some certainty that many of the processes in membrane dynamics can take place only with the aid of contractile proteins such as actin myosin and tubulin Acta Physiologica Scandinavica ,1996 The Journal of Experimental Biology ,2008 Visual Purple Arlington Colton Krause,1951 Cold Spring Harbor Symposia on Quantitative Biology Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory of Quantitative Biology,1966 Annual Biology Colloquium ,1957 Journal Für Hirnforschung ,1987 American Scientist ,1942
