La distribución

Se llama distribución al conjunto de piezas que regulan la entrada y salida de gases en el cilindro. Este sistema debe estar en perfecto sincronismo con el cigüeñal, para que las aperturas y cierras de las válvulas se produzcan con arreglo a las sucesivas posiciones del pistón dentro del cilindro y en los momentos adecuados.

La distribución está formada por los siguientes componentes:

- Las válvulas con sus muelles, asientos, guías y elementos de fijación.
- El árbol de levas y elementos de mando.
- Los empujadores y balancines.

Tipos de distribución

Los sistemas de distribución se pueden clasificar dependiendo de la localización del árbol de levas. Hasta los años 80 los motores estaban configurados con el árbol de levas situado en el bloque motor. Actualmente prácticamente todos los motores tienen el árbol de levas montado en la culata.

La distribución se puede clasificar teniendo en cuenta la localización del árbol de levas en el motor:

- El sistema SV o de válvulas laterales representado en la figura inferior, en el que se puede ver que la válvula ocupa una posición lateral al cilindro, es decir, la válvula está alojada en el bloque. El mando de esta válvula se efectúa con el árbol de levas situado en el bloque motor. Este sistema de distribución no se utiliza desde hace tiempo ya que las válvulas no están colocadas en la culata sino en el bloque motor, lo que provoca que la cámara de compresión tenga que ser mayor y el tamaño de las cabezas de las válvulas se vea limitada por el poco espacio que se dispone.
