Threads Gender Labor And Power In The Global Apparel Industry:

Threads Jane L. Collins, 2009-11-15 Americans have been shocked by media reports of the dismal working conditions in factories that make clothing for U S companies But while well intentioned many of these reports about child labor and sweatshop practices rely on stereotypes of how Third World factories operate ignoring the complex economic dynamics driving the global apparel industry To dispel these misunderstandings Jane L Collins visited two very different apparel firms and their factories in the United States and Mexico Moving from corporate headquarters to factory floors her study traces the diverse ties that link First and Third World workers and managers producers and consumers Collins examines how the transnational economics of the apparel industry allow firms to relocate or subcontract their work anywhere in the world making it much harder for garment workers in the United States or any other country to demand fair pay and humane working conditions Putting a human face on globalization Threads shows not only how international trade affects local communities but also how workers can organize in this new environment to more effectively demand better treatment from their distant corporate employers Unmaking the Global Sweatshop Rebecca Prentice, Geert De Neve, 2017-07-31

Anthropologists and ethnographers examine the global garment industry s impact on workers well being The 2013 collapse of Rana Plaza an eight story garment factory in Savar Bangladesh killed over a thousand workers and injured hundreds more This disaster exposed the brutal labor conditions of the global garment industry and revealed its failures as a competitive and self regulating industry Over the past thirty years corporations have widely adopted labor codes on health and safety yet too often in their working lives garment workers across the globe encounter death work related injuries and unhealthy factory environments Disasters such as Rana Plaza notwithstanding garment workers routinely work under conditions that not only escape public notice but also undermine workers long term physical health mental well being and the very sustainability of their employment Unmaking the Global Sweatshop gathers the work of leading anthropologists and ethnographers studying the global garment industry to examine the relationship between the politics of labor and initiatives to protect workers health and safety Contributors analyze both the labor processes required of garment workers as well as the global dynamics of outsourcing and subcontracting that produce such demands on workers health The accounts contained in Unmaking the Global Sweatshop trace the histories of labor standards for garment workers in the global South explore recent partnerships between corporate state and civil society actors in pursuit of accountable corporate governance analyze a breadth of initiatives that seek to improve workers health standards from ethical trade projects to human rights movements and focus on the ways in which risk health and safety might be differently conceptualized and regulated Unmaking the Global Sweatshop argues for an expansive understanding of garment workers lived experiences that recognizes the politics of labor human rights the privatization and individualization of health related responsibilities as well as the complexity of health and well being Contributors Mark Anner Hasan Ashraf Jennifer Bair Jeremy Blasi Geert De Neve Saydia Gulrukh Ingrid Hagen

Textile Economies Walter E. Little,Patricia A. McAnany,2011-10-16 Textiles have been a highly valued and central part of the politics of human societies across culture divides and over millennia The economy of textiles provides insight into the fabric of social relations local and global politics and diverse ideologies Textiles are a material element of society that fosters the study of continuities and disjunctions in the economic and social realities of past and present societies From stick loom weaving to transnational factories the production of cloth and its transformation into clothing and other woven goods offers a way to study the linkages between economics and politics The volume is oriented around a number of themes textile production textiles as trade goods textiles as symbols textiles in tourism and textiles in the transnational processes Textile Economies appeals to a broad range of scholars interested in the intersection of material culture political economy and globalization such as archaeologists cultural anthropologists economists museum curators and historians

Confronting Capital Pauline Gardiner Barber,Belinda Leach,Winnie Lem,2012-10-12 This volume is an exploration of the ways in which political economy as a mode of analysis moves anthropology toward a vital politically engaged form of scholarship. It advances the understanding of the struggles of ordinary people in the face of capitalist change. In the current economic moment when such changes are tumultuous and the instabilities of capitalism are starkly revealed, this book responds to the urgent need for theoretical and methodological approaches for understanding the forces that shape our contemporary world. Through ethnographic investigations of the quotidian and through the thematic of politics, history, and livelihoods, which distinguish Marxist political economy in the field of anthropology, the authors here reveal the increasing complexity of everyday lives. Using examples derived from fieldwork carried out across diverse geographical locations, the authors pay particular attention to historical conditions shaping the people's life trajectories. In so doing, the authors engage critically and with differing emphases with political economy and Marxism as a mode of inquiry. This book illustrates the productive tension between observations emerging from the field and theoretical debates that is generated by anthropological ethnography.

Satanic Mills or Silicon Islands? Steven C. McKay, 2018-09-05. Satanic Mills or Silicon Islands challenges the myth of globalization's homogenizing power, arguing that the uniqueness of place is becoming more, not less, important. Steven McKay documents how multinational firms secure worker control and consent by reaching beyond the high-tech factory and into local labor markets. He also traces the rise of a new breed of privatized export processing zones, revealing the state's role in these cases, the Philippines' revamped role in the wider politics of global production. Finally, McKay gives voice to the women workers themselves as they find meaning, identity, and agency on and beyond the new shop floor. This book deftly weaves together three critical strands of global studies: Southeast Asia as a key site of global production, the organization of work in advanced electronics, and working-class conditions under globalization. Drawing on the author's rich analysis of four multinational electronics firms, from their boardrooms to boarding houses, Satanic Mills or Silicon Islands makes a unique contribution to the study of work, labor, and high-tech production. Russell Bernard, Clarence C. Gravlee, 2014-07-08. The Handbook of Methods in Cultural Anthropology now in its second edition, maintains a strong benchmark for understanding the scope of contemporary anthropological field methods. Avoiding divisive debates over science and humanism, the contributors draw upon both traditions to explore fieldwork in practice. The second edition also reflects major developments of the past decade, including the rising prominence of mixed methods, the emergence of new technologies, and evolving views on ethnographic writing. Spanning the chain of research from designing a project through methods of data collection and interpretive analysis, the Handbook features new chapters on ethnography of online communities, social survey research, and network and geospatial analysis. Considered discussion of ethics, epistemology, and the presentation of research results to diverse audiences round out the volume. The result is an essential guide for all scholars, professionals, and advanced students who employ fieldwork. The China Price Alexandra Harney, 2008. Acclaimed Financial Times correspondent Alex Harney uncovers the truth about how China is able to offer such amazingly low prices to the rest of the world What she has uncovered is a brutal Hobbesian world in which pricing pressure from Western companies combines with ubiquitous corruption and lack of transparency to exact an unseen and unconscionable toll in human misery and environmental damage

Renewing International Labour Studies Marcus Taylor, 2013-09-13 This volume seeks to re energise the paradigm of the New International Labour Studies by detailing how struggles over the construction reproduction utilisation and restructuring of labour forces are the contested social foundations upon which the global economy stands Through a combination of theoretical works and a series of case studies the volume highlights the cutting edge of international labour studies Its expands on three pivotal areas of study within the discipline 1 the social construction of new labour forces across an expanding international division of labour 2 the self organising potential of workers particularly within non traditional sectors and 3 the possibilities for transborder labour movements to help address the asymmetrical power relationships between globalised capital and localised labour In addressing these themes the volume helps explain not only how the contemporary international division of labour is produced and reproduced but also the strengths and limits to current attempts to overcome its unequal and divisive nature This book was published as a special issue of Third World Quarterly

Transnational Tortillas Carolina Bank Muñoz, 2016-05-02 This book looks at the flip side of globalization How does a company from the Global South behave differently when it also produces in the Global North A Mexican tortilla company Tortimundo has two production facilities within a hundred miles of each other but on different sides of the U S Mexico border The workers at the two factories produce the same product with the same technology but have significantly different work realities This global factory gives Carolina Bank Muñoz an ideal opportunity to reveal how management regimes and company policy on each side of the border apply different strategies to exploit their respective workforces vulnerabilities The author s in depth ethnographic fieldwork shows that the U S factory is characterized by an immigration regime and the Mexican factory by a gender regime In the California factory managers use state policy and laws related to immigration status to pit documented and undocumented workers against each other Undocumented workers are subject to harsher punishment night shift work and lower pay In the Baja California factory managers sexually harass women who make up most of the workforce and create divisions between light and dark skinned women forcing them to compete for managerial attention which they understand equates with job security In describing and analyzing the differences in working conditions between the two plants Bank Muñoz provides important new insights into how in a globalized economy managerial strategies for labor control are determined by the interaction of state policies and labor market conditions with race gender and class at the point of production
