

MERLIN

The background of the cover features a dark, winged dragon, likely a dragonet, breathing fire. The dragon is positioned in the center, with its head turned towards the right. Its wings are spread wide, and a stream of fire is coming out of its mouth. The landscape below is a mix of dark, rocky terrain and patches of green grass. The overall tone is dramatic and mysterious.

Magic in Medieval Romance Michelle Sweeney, 2000 This book examines the roles of magic in medieval romance Magic's crucial function in the romances may be established by studying the diverse works of Chr tien de Troyes the Lais of Marie de France the romances of Sir Tristrem Syr Launfal Ywain Gawain and Chaucer's The Franklin's Tale Romance authors used magical trials to explore a character's moral status and position on issues important to the community such as when to maintain loyalty to a king or to a lover Romance authors were able to encourage the exploration of human motivation by using magic to create or expose a character morally ambiguous situation This technique enabled a broader discussion of social issues than would have been allowed in situations constrained by the boundaries of Christian dogmatism In order to understand the function of magic in medieval romance it is necessary to appreciate its function in the medieval world Magic is coupled to some of the most important works of the medieval age such as the theological texts of Augustine and Aquinas the histories of Geoffrey of Monmouth and Wace as well as playing a significant role in medicine and the nascent studies of science Romance writers capitalised upon the associations between magic and these fields of study to create a more serious framework for their texts The romances could then operate beyond the level of simple entertainment and provide the interested audience with social commentary moral analysis and material for thought on a wide variety of issues
