Abstract: Staphylococcus aureus (S. aureus) is a Gram-positive bacterium that is a common cause of skin and soft tissue infections. It is also a leading cause of hospital-acquired infections. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the community and to identify risk factors for colonization. A cross-sectional study was conducted in a community in the north of Mexico. A total of 100 subjects were recruited from a community health center. The subjects were asked to provide a sample of their nasal secretions. The samples were then cultured on a medium that is selective for S. aureus. The results showed that the prevalence of S. aureus was 10%. The subjects who were colonized with S. aureus were more likely to have a history of hospitalization and to have contact with health care workers. The results of this study suggest that S. aureus is a common pathogen in the community and that colonization is associated with contact with health care.
