Questions and Answers

te that when using fault. To fix this you have to dis connection using PDO is:

$connection = new PDO('mysql:dbname=dbtest;host=127.0.0.1;ch
$connection->setAttribute(PDO::ATTR_EMULATE_PREPARES, false);
$connection->setAttribute(PDO::ATTR_ERRMODE, PDO::ERRMODE_EXCEPTION);

In the above example the error mode isn't strictly necessary, but it is advised to add it. It will not stop with a Fatal Error when something goes wrong. And it gives the chance to catch any error(s) which are thrown as PDOException's.

What is mandatory however is the first `setAttribute()` line, which tells PDO to disable emulated prepared statements and use real prepared statements. This makes sure the statements aren't parsed by PHP before sending it to the MySQL server (giving a possibility to inject malicious SQL).

Although you can set the `charset` in the options of the constructor, it's important to know that versions of PHP (< 5.3.6) silently ignored the `charset` parameter in the DSN.

Explanation

What happens is that the SQL statement you pass to `prepare` is parsed and compiled on the database server. By specifying parameters (either a `?` or a named parameter like `:name` in the example above) you tell the database engine where you want to filter on. Then when you execute, the prepared statement is combined with the parameter values you specified.

An important thing here is that the parameter values are combined with the compiled SQL string. SQL injection works by tricking the script into including malicious strings in the SQL to send to the database. So by sending the actual SQL separately from the parameters, you limit the risk of ending up with something you didn't intend. Any parameters from the prepared statement will just be treated as strings (although the database engine may do some kind of sanitization so parameters may end up as numbers too, of course). In the example above, if the variable contains `'Sarah'; DELETE FROM employees`, the result would simply be a string `"'Sarah'; DELETE FROM employees"`, and you will not end up with `an employee`.

Another benefit with using prepared statements is that if you execute the same statement multiple times in the same session it will only be parsed and compiled once, giving you some speed. And since you asked about how to do it for an insert, here's an example:

$preparedStatement = $db->prepare('INSERT INTO table (col $preparedStatement->execute(array('column',
