Totem and Taboo Sigmund Freud, 2015-11-16 PRIMITIVE man is known to us by the stages of development through which he has passed that is through the inanimate monuments and implements which he has left behind for us through our knowledge of his art his religion and his attitude towards life which we have received either directly or through the medium of legends myths and fairy tales and through the remnants of his ways of thinking that survive in our own manners and customs Moreover in a certain sense he is still our contemporary there are people whom we still consider more closely related to primitive man than to ourselves in whom we therefore recognize the direct descendants and representatives of earlier man We can thus judge the so called savage and semi savage races their psychic life assumes a peculiar interest for us for we can recognize in their psychic life a well preserved early stage of our own development If this assumption is correct a comparison of the Psychology of Primitive Races as taught by folklore with the psychology of the neurotic as it has become known through psychoanalysis will reveal numerous points of correspondence and throw new light on subjects that are more or less familiar to us For outer as well as for inner reasons I am choosing for this comparison those tribes which have been described by ethnographers as being most backward and wretched the aborigines of the youngest continent namely Australia whose fauna has also preserved for us so much that is archaic and no longer to be found elsewhere

Psychoanalysis and the Act of Artistic Creation Luís Manuel Romano Delgado, 2022-09-26 This book explores the phenomenon of creativity and creation from a psychoanalytic point of view focusing on understanding the psychoemotional dynamics underlying artistic creative activities such as theatre literature and painting Throughout Delgado considers these works of art through a Bionian Kleinian and Freudian lens He uses three major psychoanalytic models of the creative process two of them classic the first Freudian based on the theory of conflict between impulse and defense the result of the effort to manage an excessive drive activity and in which the concept of sublimation is central the second Kleinian based on the attachment theory in which creative effort corresponds to an attempt to repair the damage done to the object or to the self and the third more recent affiliated with the more expanded attachment relationship theory
