Loving, Supporting, and Caring for the Cancer Patient Stan Goldberg, 2016-10-07

At least once in your life someone will say to you I have cancer and when she says the three words you may struggle with a response If a loved one or friend hasn't informed you of a cancer diagnosis it's only a matter of time until they will Every year fourteen million people worldwide learn they are living with or may die from this insidious illness The uncertainty of cancer causes anxiety in those diagnosed and feelings of inadequacy in loved ones and friends who want to help When someone says I have cancer what will you say More importantly what will you do In Loving Supporting and Caring for the Cancer Patient readers will learn specific ways of going beyond the response I'm so sorry and practical behaviors that will ease a loved one or friend's journey They range from being specific immediately after a diagnosis to honoring their loved one or friend at the moment of passing Based on Stan Goldberg's own cancer journey thirty years of counseling and coaching people living with cancer and their loved ones and as a bedside volunteer in four hospices over eight years the book is filled with poignant accounts of clients and patients' personal reflections and age-old stories filled with infinite wisdom
