

PPK EXPERIMENTAL

The Model PPK Experimental was an experimental design that took place near the beginning of the Model PPK production. It is basically a Model PPK in caliber 7.65mm with bottom magazine release. This experimental PPK has a modified slide with no safety lever on the slide. Front and rear sights were standard Model PPK. The hammer is a semi-concealed hollow ring hammer with a slightly uncircular shape. This shape enabled the shooter to more easily cock the pistol. The frame is a standard Model PPK with bottom magazine release and one piece brown plastic wrap around grips. It has a standard PPK magazine in 7.65mm. On the left side of the frame directly behind the trigger is the safety lever. This experimental PPK is a blowback designed pistol with double action firing. There are no Walther Banner, legends, proof marks or serial numbers.

WALTHER MODEL UNKNOWN

The Walther in FIGURE # 151 and FIGURE # 152 is an unknown Walther pistol in caliber 4mm which the author had never encountered. Whether the pistol should be categorized as a Model PP or PPK prototype; or a target pistol prototype is unanswerable. As the pistol most closely resembles the PP and PPK models it will be placed in this series of discussion.

The slide most closely resembles the PPK slide with fixed front and rear sights. The many serrations along each side of the slide were placed there to aid the shooter in pulling the slide back after each shot of the 4mm cartridge. This pistol would have to be manually cocked after each shot because the 4mm cartridge would not be powerful enough to blow the slide back into a cocking position after every shot. The ringed hammer also resembles the PPK hammer.

The frame of the pistol is stepped near the trigger and has both front and rear grip straps as in the PP. There is a take down lever at the forward part of the trigger guard. Grips are two piece checkered walnut with the left grip contoured to allow the safety lever to operate upward or downward. The magazine is much the same size as either the PP or PPK with a small finger extension. It is held in place by a bottom magazine release catch. There are no markings on this pistol.

I believe the pistol was designed for one of two reasons. It was either designed as a prototype for an indoor target pistol that the Walther Company hoped to market, or possibly one of the Walther's themselves had it made for his own personal shooting.
