I always assumed Google Translate worked by treating language as a kind of code: the user pours a text into the programme, which then draws on a huge internal dictionary to translate or decode it into another language. It doesn't. Google Translate has no dictionary function. It does not rely on notions of meaning at all. Instead, it trawls through the entire Internet for previous translations of different texts, looking for where requested words and phrases have been translated before (Bellos 2012: 262–267). The translation it then comes up with is based on nothing more than statistical probability. It treats language as a huge resource, one that digital technologies make available in previously unimagined ways. It also relies on the fact that while the possibilities for language use are infinitely various, every language utterance must also draw on set conventions if it is to be understood. Infinite variation is balanced by generic constraints. Whatever is put into the Net for translation, something like it has almost certainly been entered and translated before.

So is nothing original? Are all our utterances reducible to a set of computational algorithms? Well, yes and no. The books under review here

Imitating Authors Colin Burrow, 2019-05-16 Imitating Authors is a major study of the theory and practice of imitatio the imitation of one author by another from antiquity to the present day It extends from early Greek texts right up to recent fictions about clones and artificial humans and illuminates both the theory and practice of imitation At its centre lie the imitating authors of the English Renaissance including Ben Jonson and the most imitated imitator of them all John Milton Imitating Authors argues that imitation was not simply a matter of borrowing words or of alluding to an earlier author Imitators learnt practices from earlier writers They imitated the structures and forms of earlier writing in ways that enabled them to create a new style which itself could be imitated That made imitation an engine of literary change Imitating Authors also shows how the metaphors used by theorists to explain this complex practice fed into works which were themselves imitations and how those metaphors have come to influence present day anxieties about imitation human beings and artificial forms of intelligence It explores relationships between imitation and authorial style its fraught connections with plagiarism and how emerging ideas of genius and intellectual property changed how imitation was practised In refreshing and jargon free prose Burrow explains not just what imitation was in the past but how it influences the present and what it could be in the future Imitating Authors includes detailed discussion of Plato Roman rhetorical theory Virgil Lucretius Petrarch Cervantes Ben Jonson Milton Pope Wordsworth Mary Shelley and Kazuo Ishiguro Contemporary Nordic Literature and Spatiality Kristina Malmio, Kaisa Kurikka, 2019-10-14 This open access collection offers a detailed mapping of recent Nordic literature and its different genres fiction poetry and children s literature through the perspective of spatiality Concentrating on contemporary Nordic literature the book presents a distinctive view on the spatial turn and widens the understanding of Nordic literature outside of canonized authors Examining literatures by Danish Norwegian Swedish and Finnish authors the chapters investigate a recurrent theme of social criticism and analyze this criticism against the welfare state and power hierarchies in spatial terms The chapters explore various narrative worlds and spaces from the urban to parks and forests from textual spaces to spatial thematics studying these spatial features in relation to the problems of late modernity
