

COMPOUNDING

Compound interest may be calculated by using the formula

$$FV = P[1 + R/N]^{(NT)}$$

Here,

PV = initial investment or present value

r = interest rate (in decimals, divide the given percentage by 100)

n = the number of times the value is compounded

t = number of years

The value of n is proportional to the number of times the value is compounded.

if the sum is compounded annually, n = 1.

if the sum is compounded every six months, n = 2.

if the sum is compounded quarterly, n = 4.

if the sum is compounded monthly, n = 12.

if the sum is compounded weekly, n = 52.

if the sum is compounded every day, n = 365.

► Compounding occurs when you gain interest in your investment over time, increasing your earnings.

The Oxford Handbook of Compounding Rochelle Lieber, Pavol Stekauer, 2011-07-07 This book presents a comprehensive review of theoretical work on the linguistics and psycholinguistics of compound words and combines it with a series of surveys of compounding in a variety of languages from a wide range of language families Compounding is an effective way to create and express new meanings Compound words are segmentable into their constituents so that new items can often be understood on first presentation However as keystone keynote and keyboard and breadboard sandwich board and mortarboard show the relation between components is often far from straightforward The question then arises as to how far compound sequences are analysed at each encounter and how far they are stored in the brain as single lexical items The nature and processing of compounds thus offer an unusually direct route to how language operates in the mind as well as providing the means of investigating important aspects of morphology and lexical semantics and insights to child language acquisition and the organization of the mental lexicon This book is the first to report on the state of the art on these and other central topics including the classification and typology of compounds and cross linguistic research on the subject in different frameworks and from synchronic and diachronic perspectives

Creative Compounding in English Réka Benczes,2006-01-01 Metaphorical and metonymical compounds novel and lexicalised ones alike are remarkably abundant in language Yet how can we be sure that when using an expression such as land fishing in order to speak about metal detecting the referent will be immediately understood even if the hearer had not been previously familiar with the compound Accordingly this book sets out to explore whether the semantics of metaphorical and metonymical noun noun combinations can be systematically analysed within a theoretical framework where systematicity pertains to regularities in both the cognitive processes and the products of these processes that is the compounds themselves Backed up by recent psycholinguistic evidence the book convincingly demonstrates that such compounds are not semantically opaque as it has been formerly claimed they can in fact be analysed and accounted for within a cognitive linguistic framework by the combined application of metaphor metonymy blending profile determinacy and schema theory and represent the creative and associative word formation processes that we regularly apply in everyday language
