Structure for Dependability: Computer-Based Systems from an Interdisciplinary Perspective

Denis Besnard, Cristina Gacek, Cliff Jones, 2006-04-28 Computer based systems are now essential to everyday life They involve both technical hardware software components and human beings as active participants Whenever we go aboard an aircraft or withdraw money from a cash point a combination of humans machines and software is supporting the delivery of the service These systems and many others benefit from the miniaturisation and cost reduction of the hardware which has made it possible for computers to be embedded everywhere An equally remarkable development is the software involved today systems are built which were literally unthinkable twenty or thirty years ago Measured in terms of their function the productivity of their creation has also advanced enormously largely because of the software infrastructure Even the dependability of the best of today's software is praiseworthy when one considers the complexity of the functionality provided Solid engineering and the increasing adoption of methods based on firmly established theory are to be thanked here However in large and complex systems there remain major challenges to achieving dependability when complex interactions exist between technical and human components Large and complex things are understood as assemblages of simpler components the way these components fit together is the structure of the system Structure can be real and physical or a subjective mental tool for analysis
