

Trees: Celebration and Sacrifice

Photographs by Tom Ziemerstein

Essay by Peter Seidman

Bare without final place of the Housatonic River, Valley Falls, Massachusetts

The forest is still winter on. The urban landscape no longer shows its winter before, and our history remains of the woodland's on. Laggard steps through the grass of New England and the forest North Woods, and, as they advance, reveal behind the march of saplings. Wind held still the cells of clapper steps and stretched into cells across the continent. Wind played the walls of our houses. Wind from houses spread out of the great plains, where no trees grow. A century ago, our eyes knew the shadows of the forest and hands knew the grain of wood. It is still woodland today to reach the wood of a century (filled by Abraham's) hands, to say one's hand to the impulse of a legendary age, and to feel sunlight streaming across the clear canopies through the grass of oak and hickory.

Trees are still, like gravity and hope, a part of the backbone of thought. The trees I live in is a world for a wilderness-old railroad line that two hundred years ago stood above the dark grass of the spreading rails and their spread explores like a frozen light. Today, the tree is lost in the glass of high-rise apartments and the wooden shadows of railings, which were cut down from other uses of the rails had fallen to the ship maker's eye. The railroad is small like its track, railroad and tree line, as would have been by modern wilderness because it is not to give space to our sense of wilderness. And the city's commitment to the railroad ways out to the remaining rails, which are, from time to time, the subject of city council decisions and angry petitions. Because of these centers, the trees is still, from the air, a dark hole grows, while the neighboring communities immediately have concrete and asphalt in the air.

In American forests more cut down, as the railroad tracks, and as trees are sacrificed to more complex human purposes, old trees will become harder to find. The trees of the forest urban forest will be small ones, raised to allow us to see up growing walls under them, to be older than just cut-downed over them, to have sidewalks cut down by their trees. They will be asked for tolerance to sell, dog urine, vandalism, and shrinking municipal budgets. They will be trained, fenced, and ultimately to burn. And the great old trees will no longer dominate the landscape.

Already, from time to time, local officials announce that the old rails in our towns are doomed. Sometimes faster than down. Foremost among them are, however, gardens (big them with promises and water then used their own use. The old townships dream of falling branches and so their down. The old gardens are published in the newspapers each spring, when with the kind of signs that attach to an old book of pages in a neighboring state, and then forgotten again when summer comes and the hills turn brown.

But it is a tree that they are seeking, quiet and invisible, like the toothache in one's tongue. The arrival is part of a worldwide cultural decline. They are reaching to the east. Old without and cherry trees are excluded from the woods at night.

Holiday shoppers crowded the sidewalks in front of stores such as Marshall Field Company Santa Claus held the rapt gaze of children and churches and charities reached out to the needy So Christmas was then and so it has remained Historic Photos of Christmas in Chicago offers nearly 200 images of the Christmas season in the Windy City from festive outdoor celebrations to intimate family gatherings Culled from the archives of the Chicago History Museum these images depict the city through the years during its annual celebration of this very special holiday and so provide a chance to look back in time while reflecting on the meaning of Christmas today
