¿Qué es el arbitraje? En los campos de la economía y las finanzas, el arbitraje se refiere a la técnica de aprovechar una discrepancia en los precios en dos o más mercados mediante una combinación de acuerdos de equiparación para capitalizar la diferencia. El beneficio resulta de la diferencia entre los precios de mercado a los que se comercializa la unidad. Una transacción se considera arbitraje cuando es empleada por académicos. Un arbitraje es una transacción que no incluye un flujo de efectivo negativo en ningún estado probabilístico o temporal y un flujo de efectivo positivo en al menos un estado. Para decirlo de otra manera, es el potencial de obtener ganancias sin riesgo después de considerar los costos de transacción. Cuando existe la posibilidad de comprar rápidamente algo a un precio bajo y luego venderlo a un precio más alto, por ejemplo, este es un ejemplo de oportunidad de arbitraje. Vínculo de guerra Fouad Sabry, 2024-06-22

¿Qué es el bono de guerra? Los bonos de guerra son un tipo de título de deuda emitido por un gobierno para respaldar operaciones militares y otros gastos durante tiempos de guerra sin aumentar impuestos a un nivel impopular. Además, son un método para controlar la inflación retirando dinero de la circulación en una economía que se estimula durante una época de conflicto. Se consideran bonos de guerra tanto los bonos minoristas que se venden al público en general como los bonos mayoristas que se intercambian en los mercados de valores. Ha habido varios casos en los que los llamamientos al patriotismo y la conciencia fueron seguidos de exhortaciones a comprar bonos de guerra. Al igual que otros bonos minoristas, los bonos de guerra minoristas suelen tener un rendimiento inferior al que ofrece el mercado. Además, los bonos de guerra minoristas suelen estar disponibles en una amplia gama de denominaciones para garantizar que estén al alcance de todos los residentes.
