

Magnetically controlled proportional valve (MPROP)

A magnetically controlled proportional valve (MPROP) controls the high pressure pump to ensure that the correct fuel pressure (rail pressure) is retained despite varying engine speed and loading.

The valve is located in the high pressure pump at the rear of the engine on the left.

The input signal to the valve is a PWM signal whose pulse width is controlled by the engine control module.

When the current through the valve is changed, this affects the fuel flow, which results in changed fuel pressure (rail pressure).

Supercharger

The mechanical supercharger is located at the right front of the engine. An electromagnetic clutch is used to engage and disengage the supercharger.

The engine control unit activates the coupling by providing the coupling solenoid with current.

Water switch, secondary fuel filter

A monitor is located underneath the secondary fuel filter. Its task is to discover water in the fuel system.

The monitor consists of a measurement probe containing two measurement points, galvanically isolated by a layer of insulation. The measurement probe is in contact with the fuel.

When there is no water in the fuel, the resistance between the measurement points is very high. If there is any water in the fuel, the resistance falls. When the resistance falls below a limit value (which happens when water gets into the fuel), the engine control module receives an alarm signal.
