Pharmacology: Week 8: 2020

1. What is the importance of K_m and V_{max} and what does K_m represent?
 K_m is a measure of the affinity of an enzyme for its substrate. It is the concentration of substrate at which the reaction rate is half of V_{max} . It is a measure of the enzyme's ability to bind its substrate. A low K_m indicates a high affinity for the substrate, while a high K_m indicates a low affinity.
2. What is V_{max} ?
 V_{max} is the maximum rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction. It is the rate at which the enzyme is working as fast as it can. It is a measure of the enzyme's catalytic activity.
3. How does temperature affect the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction?
The rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction increases with temperature up to a point, after which it decreases. This is because the enzyme's active site is affected by temperature. At low temperatures, the enzyme is not working as fast as it can. As the temperature increases, the enzyme's active site becomes more flexible, and the reaction rate increases. However, if the temperature is too high, the enzyme's active site will be denatured, and the reaction rate will decrease.
4. What is the importance of pH in determining K_m and V_{max} ?
pH is a measure of the acidity or basicity of a solution. It affects the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction by affecting the enzyme's active site. At a pH that is too low or too high, the enzyme's active site will be denatured, and the reaction rate will decrease. The optimal pH for an enzyme is the pH at which the reaction rate is highest.
5. How does substrate concentration affect the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction?
The rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction increases with substrate concentration up to a point, after which it levels off. This is because the enzyme's active site is saturated with substrate. At low substrate concentrations, the enzyme is not working as fast as it can. As the substrate concentration increases, the enzyme's active site becomes more saturated, and the reaction rate increases. However, once the enzyme's active site is saturated, the reaction rate will no longer increase.
6. What is the importance of cofactors in enzyme activity?
Cofactors are non-protein molecules that are required for the activity of an enzyme. They can be inorganic ions or organic molecules. Cofactors can affect the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction by affecting the enzyme's active site. Some cofactors are essential for the enzyme to be active at all, while others are only required for the enzyme to work at its maximum rate.
7. What is the importance of inhibitors in enzyme activity?
Inhibitors are molecules that bind to an enzyme and decrease its activity. They can be reversible or irreversible. Reversible inhibitors bind to the enzyme's active site, preventing the substrate from binding. Irreversible inhibitors bind to the enzyme's active site, permanently blocking the substrate from binding. Inhibitors can be used to study the mechanism of an enzyme and to develop drugs that inhibit the activity of a specific enzyme.
8. How does the concentration of an enzyme affect the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction?
The rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction increases with the concentration of the enzyme. This is because there are more enzyme molecules available to catalyze the reaction. The rate of the reaction will increase linearly with the concentration of the enzyme, as long as the substrate concentration is high enough to saturate the enzyme.
9. What is the importance of the Michaelis-Menten equation in enzyme kinetics?
The Michaelis-Menten equation is a mathematical model that describes the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction. It is used to determine the K_m and V_{max} of an enzyme. The equation is: $V = \frac{V_{max} [S]}{K_m + [S]}$, where V is the reaction rate, V_{max} is the maximum rate, K_m is the Michaelis constant, and $[S]$ is the substrate concentration.
10. How does the concentration of a substrate affect the rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction?
The rate of an enzyme-catalyzed reaction increases with substrate concentration up to a point, after which it levels off. This is because the enzyme's active site is saturated with substrate. At low substrate concentrations, the enzyme is not working as fast as it can. As the substrate concentration increases, the enzyme's active site becomes more saturated, and the reaction rate increases. However, once the enzyme's active site is saturated, the reaction rate will no longer increase.
