

Introduction

At times, when unfortunate disasters occurred, people were introduced with social characters that were quite generous, and kind enough to help them to overcome the stress. These characters have often been rewarded with the recognition of a hero in many instances as can be observed in mythological stories. The non-fiction literature by Dave Eggers in the year 2009 and titled as "Zeitoun" is also one of such creations. In this book, Dave Eggers brings together the two most influencing powers of the then United States political and climatic environments; the upset of terrorism and war along with the trauma of natural disasters such as Hurricane Katrina. This literature is stated to be based on a real life story of Abdulrahman Zeitoun (Pilkington, "The Amazing True Story of Zeitoun"). In his writing, Dave Eggers showcases the entire scenario as follows.

Abdulrahman Zeitoun was a Syrian-American living in New Orleans and the owner of a decorating company, a building and several houses that demanded continuous maintenances. At the day when Hurricane Katrina struck the coastal areas of New Orleans, Abdulrahman Zeitoun decided to help his neighbors and other people in need of rescue and treatment on a second hand canoe. However, on his mission he had suddenly disappeared. Later it was revealed that he was imprisoned as a suspected terrorist and was kept under custody for nearly 23 days (Rahim, "Zeitoun by Dave Eggers: Review").
