

Understanding Prostate Cancer

What is the prostate?

The prostate is a small, walnut-shaped gland in men that produces and stores semen. It is located below the bladder and in front of the rectum. The prostate is made up of several lobes, and its size can vary from about the size of a walnut to the size of a grapefruit.

How does prostate cancer develop?

Prostate cancer develops when cells in the prostate gland start to grow out of control. These cells can form a tumor that can grow larger and spread to other parts of the body. The most common type of prostate cancer is adenocarcinoma, which starts in the glandular cells of the prostate.

Prostate cancer can be found in the prostate gland, the seminal vesicles, the vas deferens, and the ureters. It can also spread to other parts of the body, such as the bones, lymph nodes, and other organs.

Prostate cancer is often found in the prostate gland, but it can also spread to other parts of the body. The most common way for prostate cancer to spread is through the bloodstream. It can also spread through the lymphatic system or directly to other parts of the body.

Prostate cancer can spread to the lymph nodes, which are part of the body's immune system. The lymph nodes are located throughout the body, and they help to filter out harmful substances from the bloodstream.

Prostate cancer can spread to the bones, which are part of the body's support structure. The bones are made up of a hard, mineralized tissue called bone. Prostate cancer cells can break down the bone, which can cause pain and other problems.

Prostate cancer is classified by how quickly it grows

Prostate cancer is classified by how quickly it grows. The most common way to measure this is by using the Gleason score, which is a number from 1 to 10. A higher score indicates a more aggressive cancer.

What are the symptoms of prostate cancer?

The most common symptoms of prostate cancer are changes in urination, such as frequent urination, difficulty starting or stopping urination, and blood in the urine. Other symptoms include pain in the back, hips, or legs, and weight loss.

How is prostate cancer diagnosed?

Prostate cancer is usually diagnosed through a combination of tests. These include a physical exam, a blood test called a PSA test, and a biopsy. A biopsy involves taking a small sample of tissue from the prostate gland and looking at it under a microscope.
