

Chapter 12: Chapter Summary

LO 1. Journalize transactions for long-term notes payable and mortgages payable

Long-term notes payable and mortgages payable are reported in the long-term liabilities section of the balance sheet unless there is a portion due within one year. That portion is shown in the current liabilities section of the balance sheet. An amortization schedule should be prepared that details each loan payment's allocation between principal and interest and also the beginning and ending balances of the loan. Mortgages payable are long-term debts that are backed with a security interest in specific property.

LO 2. Describe bonds payable

Bonds payable represent long-term debt issued to multiple lenders called bondholders, usually in increments of $1,000 per bond. The bond requires a face value payment at maturity and interest payments based on a stated interest rate over the life of the bond. A bond can be issued at face value, at a discount, or at a premium. A bond is issued at face value when the stated interest rate is equal to the market interest rate. A bond is issued at less than face value when the stated interest rate is less than the market interest rate. A bond is issued at more than face value when the stated interest rate is more than the market interest rate.

LO 3. Journalize transactions for bonds payable and interest expense using the straight-line amortization method

The basic journal entry to record the issuance of bonds payable debits Cash and credits Bonds Payable. If a bond is issued at a discount, Discount on Bonds Payable will be debited for the difference between the face value and cash received. If a bond is issued at a premium, Premium on Bonds Payable will be credited for the difference between the cash received and face value. Interest payments must be recorded with a debit to Interest Expense and a credit to Cash. Discount on Bonds Payable and Premium on Bonds Payable must be amortized over the life of the bond. The straight-line amortization method allocates an equal amount of the bond discount or premium to each interest period.

LO 4. Journalize transactions to retire bonds payable

When bonds are retired at maturity, the entry involves a debit to Bonds Payable and a credit to Cash for the face value of the bond. Retirement of bonds before maturity involves writing off the remaining portion of the discount or premium account and crediting a gain or debiting a loss on retirement.

LO 5. Report liabilities on the balance sheet
