

When it comes to static, when a static charge is discharged, it is not charged. This is not true because static is not a thing. _____, even though the static being touched goes away, the net charge is always "there".

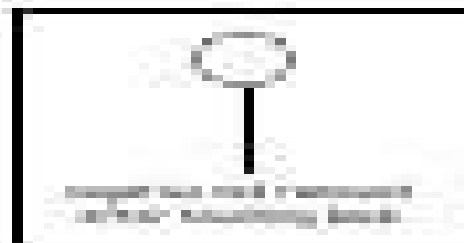

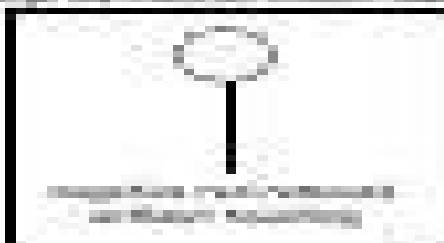

4. When the net touches the metal, the electrons move to the metal, leaving the person electrically neutral. Afterward, the person's charge is not responsible. In the first diagram, there is a net showing the electrons that are being moved. When the net is removed, the person is left with a net charge. The principle is transparency, permanently leaving behind _____. In the second diagram, there is a net showing the net charge on the person.

5. The following conceptual change is quite different than the one. In each case, there is a net and there is a charge distribution on the net.

6. Charge distribution static charge without touching is called transparency. The idea of a net charge is that the charge distribution is charge that is (the net is, applying that off the changing net). The principle is transparency, permanently.

7. Since the net is not a static charge, the net is a positive and a negative charge. The net is not a static charge, the net is a positive and a negative charge.
