Their Highest Potential An African American School Community In The Segregated South:

Their Highest Potential Vanessa Siddle Walker, 2000-11-09 African American schools in the segregated South faced enormous obstacles in educating their students But some of these schools succeeded in providing nurturing educational environments in spite of the injustices of segregation Vanessa Siddle Walker tells the story of one such school in rural North Carolina the Caswell County Training School which operated from 1934 to 1969 She focuses especially on the importance of dedicated teachers and the principal who believed their jobs extended well beyond the classroom and on the community s parents who worked hard to support the school According to Walker the relationship between school and community was mutually dependent Parents sacrificed financially to meet the school s needs and teachers and administrators put in extra time for professional development specialized student assistance and home visits The result was a school that placed the needs of African American students at the center of its mission which was in turn shared by the community Walker concludes that the experience of CCTS captures a segment of the history of African Americans in segregated schools that has been overlooked and that provides important context for the ongoing debate about how best to educate African American children

Racial Opportunity Cost Terah Venzant Chambers,2022-08-16 Racial Opportunity Cost turns critical attention to the specific challenges faced by high achieving students of color and gives educators a framework for recognizing and addressing these issues Terah Venzant Chambers roots her discussion in the concept of racial opportunity cost using a term borrowed from economics to refer to the obstacles faced and tradeoffs made by Black and Latinx students on the path to academic success Gathering first hand accounts from students practitioners and researchers Venzant Chambers underscores a set of experiences common to academically successful students from racially minoritized backgrounds especially those who attend predominantly white schools These individual testimonies collectively show how despite their successes high achieving students of color regularly encounter educational racism As their experiences reveal their academic progress may also be impeded by secondary stressors such as peer and cultural isolation and struggles with racial identity These personal accounts illustrate the many ways in which the negative effects of racial opportunity cost extend from K 12 education into postsecondary academics and beyond In this clarifying work Venzant Chambers identifies the factors such as school culture intersectionality and community acceptance that can increase or lessen racial opportunity cost across educational environments She considers how the individual challenges that high achieving and high ability students of color confront reflect larger systemic problems Venzant Chambers framework will help educators proactively cultivate change in their classrooms and schools so that they may lower racial opportunity cost and improve student experiences
