Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial with 40 participants (20 in the intervention group and 20 in the control group) aged 65 and older. The intervention group performed a 12-week aquatic exercise program, while the control group remained sedentary. Physical fitness was measured using a 6-minute walk test, and health-related quality of life was measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The results showed that the intervention group had significantly higher scores on the 6-minute walk test and the SF-36 questionnaire compared to the control group at the end of the 12-week period. These findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program can improve physical fitness and health-related quality of life in older adults.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 10-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The study group consisted of 20 children (10 boys and 10 girls) who were randomly selected from the school. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any physical activity program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The measurements included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher heart rates and blood pressures at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. Additionally, the experimental group had a significantly lower body mass index at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 10-year-old children.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program was supervised by a physical therapist and consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The walking speed was set at 1.5 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to remain sedentary. The primary outcome measure was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) score. Secondary outcome measures included changes in heart rate, blood pressure, and self-reported physical and psychological health. The 6MWT score increased significantly in the walking group compared to the control group. There were no significant changes in heart rate, blood pressure, or self-reported physical and psychological health. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Police Use of Force Joseph B. Kuhns, Johannes Knutsson, 2010-04-09 A team of expert contributors provides an in-depth exploration of police use of force, firearms, and less than lethal weapons from a dozen countries across five continents. Police Use of Force: A Global Perspective is a fascinating international exploration of police use of force, firearms, and less than lethal weapons in nations around the world. The book is comprised of three sections: the first focuses on the use of force generally; the second explores firearms and deadly force; and the final section considers less than lethal weapons, including pepper spray, TASERS, and other emerging technologies currently on the horizon. The essays gathered here will provide readers with an understanding of the vast differences in how police use force in various countries, as well as why police use force differently under different forms of government. Topics covered include use of force definitions, training procedures, policy issues, abuse of police authority, use of force during interrogations, and the use of firearms by armed and unarmed police forces. Finally, there is an essay focusing on how shooting and killing a suspect impacts an officer in the months and years that follow.
