Abstract: This study examined the effects of a group-based intervention designed to increase awareness of the social norms of sexual violence among college students. The intervention was delivered by trained student leaders and consisted of two sessions. Results showed that participants' knowledge about sexual violence increased significantly after the intervention. Furthermore, participants' attitudes toward sexual violence became more positive, and their intentions to intervene decreased significantly. These findings suggest that the intervention was effective in increasing awareness of the social norms of sexual violence and in promoting positive attitudes and intentions.
